March 2017

The modern Olympic Games are no longer held to honor the gods. They are a sport event only. They are not just held in Greece but all over the world. Some things, however, are the same. Athletes still devote years to training. They still take an oath to compete fairly and to obey the rules. Many events are still like those in the ancient Olympics. While there are no more chariots, there are still horses. Athletes still run races and throw the javelin and the discus. There is still boxing, wrestling and the long jump. There's a lot more you can learn about ancient Greece and the Olympics. The fun of researching is seeing how many different sources you can explore!
